Summary and Analysis

The directors' remuneration report and company ownership details for Spire Health provide significant insights into remuneration structure, shareholding, and incentives alignment.

- Executive directors receive a mix of fixed pay, annual bonuses based on EBITDA, free cash flow, and strategic objectives, and long-term incentive plans (LTIPs) linked to TSR, ROCE, regulatory ratings, and employee engagement. The remuneration has decreased from 2023 but reflects strategic achievements and market adjustments.
- Share ownership by the CEO, Justin Ash, is robust and significantly exceeds the guideline of twice base salary, indicating strong alignment with shareholders. Harbant Samra, appointed during 2024, is progressing towards the guideline.
- The incentives structure includes deferred share bonuses and nil-cost option awards under LTIP, subject to multi-year performance conditions designed to encourage sustainable performance.
- Non-executive directors have modest fees with incremental fees for chair roles, consistent with governance norms.

- Very active use of performance-linked pay, with transparent performance outcomes and significant disclosure on vesting and outstanding awards.
- The link between remuneration and the company’s financial and operational targets (EBITDA, FCF, ROCE) aligns management incentives with company financial health.

Conclusion:
The ownership and remuneration structure of Spire Health demonstrates a well-governed approach, balancing fixed and variable pay, incorporating clear performance metrics linked to financial and operational goals. The CEO holds significant shares, showing confidence in long-term company value, while newer executives are building towards these holdings. This framework supports alignment of management interests with those of shareholders and underscores the company’s focus on profitability, cash flow generation, and sustained regulatory performance.
